ALLANSFORD ALIVE SCHOOL NEWSLETTER

PRINCIPAL CHATTER

In responding to the pandemic over the last 20 months, we have had to reframe many programs and daily operational procedures at school. One of the biggest challenges over this time, has been the impact of the pandemic on our regular events that students look forward to. We had some extremely positive feedback in relation to our Book Week celebrations. Thanks to all students, staff and parents for making the celebration an event that bought the school community together.

The 'Indigenous Literacy Foundation' celebrates Indigenous Literacy Day by raising the importance of books and reading. Most remote community's report there are fewer than five books in family homes.

If you get the opportunity view this short story - 'Moli det bigibigi' on You Tube - it shows you how picture story books are being used to teach the young about traditional native language with English translation.

REMOTE LEARNING AWARD

Finn Beaton has done an outstanding job with his remote learning and last week was recognized for all his efforts. Well done, Finn!

THE MANY FACES OF REMOTE LEARNING

ON-SITE SUPERVISION

On-site supervision is one of the many aspects of remote learning. With many families permitted to work in lockdown, their children need supervision to continue their learning. We thank our wonderful supervisors who support students at school on a daily basis.

WEBEX GROUPS

Our staff provide regular check in times and small group readings on WebEx with students in their classes. Sometimes these are combined with students on-site who may be working on a similar task or working towards the same goal. Please try and access these important times.

LEARNING PACK FEEDBACK

Each week, staff provide feedback on student learning using a myriad of mechanisms. Written feedback via Dojo, verbal feedback in live sessions and further written feedback on key assessment tasks. Staff also record daily check-ins and WebEx participation.

LEARNING PACK PRESENTATION

Each week of remote learning, staff commence the process of planning and preparing next week's learning pack. This takes a significant amount of effort to ensure a flow of appropriate activities and as much as you can the appropriate content for all.
